TIED TO A MANIAC.

George Tells Why He Doesn't Care to Visit the Insane Asylum. Three miners from Angels' Camp were in Stockton recently. They staid at the Commercial hotel, and during the day met several old time acquaintances. In the afternoon one of the trio suggested a trip through the State Insane asylum.

"Excuse me. I prefer to stay outside the walls of that institution," said the smallest man of the three, a man who would probably weigh about 120 pounds. "Six or seven years ago I was working a placer claim up in Placer county on the American river. I formed a partnership with a powerful Italian called Macaroni Mike. He was a big fellow, weighed at least 240 pounds and was as strong as an ex team. Macaroni was known to have lifted 750 pounds dead weight from the ground and placed it in a wagon. He was a great partner, as cheerful as a schoolgirl about to graduate. But Macaroni fell in love, and the object of his big, manly heart was a little French girl, the daugh ter of a miner.

"Macaroni thought all was right when one morning in early summer he learned that his little sweetheart had skipped to Sacramento with a young grocer from Michigan Bluff and got married. From that time on he was queer, but was not violent until about a month later, when one evening while we were eating our bacon, beans and trout Macaroni suddenly eprang from his chair, and yelling, 'I'll killa the mon!' dashed wildly up the trail from the river in the direction of Forest We found Macaroni about 10 o'clock that night seated on a fallen log, his hugo body swaying from side to side, an' he monning like a wounded bear. Being my partner, it was thought best that I should first approach him and see if I could manage him. I did so, and to my happy surprise I found that he had become very quiet and talked quite rational.

"I felt sure Macaroni was himself again. I knew if we endeavored to tie his hands and feet he'd get his dago up and clean us all out. So I suggested that when he fell asleep they slip a noose of a lariat around one of his ankles and fasten tho other end to the rope around my ankle. Then, should Macaroni awake and attempt to leave us, I'd feel the tug and try to quiet him. They acted on the sugges-tion, and half an hour later we were all snoring away on the bosom of mother

"About 5 o'clock in the morning I dreamed I had roped a wild steer and that my broncho began bucking, and just as I was about to be yanked from the saddle I awoke, to find Macaroni tearing down the hillside and I flying after him. One moment I'd be on my feet; the next on my head; then on my back; then rolling sideways; then over again I'd go, expecting every bump to be my last. When I got my senses again, I was in my cabin, a mass of bruises and cuts from head to foot.
"'Where's Macaroni?' I asked.

"'Guess he's in Stockton, George,' replied my miner attendant. 'He cut loose from you after dragging you 200 yards down the hill and through the brush. A week later he was captured in the mountains, and finally sent to the asylum at

William H. Crane's Anecdotes.

There is a well known manager who is generally regarded as the Mrs. Malaprop of the profession, and the anecdotes of his laughable mistakes in the use of words and his general misunderstanding of much that is said in his presence are among the most amusing theatrical happenings that have ever come under my observation. I once chanced to be present during a rehearsal at his theater when he noticed that a gentleman who manipulated the cornet in the orchestra was not playing.

"Look here," said the manager, coming down to the footlights, "why aren't you

Because, sir, I have 16 bars rest here," said the cornet player, pointing to the score of his music.

"Rest!" said the exasperated manager. "Do I pay you to rest? Now you go right ahead and play. If I catch you resting again, I'll discharge you."

I once sat beside this same manager at a banquet when he was called on to re-spond to the toast, "The Stage," and he did so in a speech which for grammatical errors was simply unique. When he had sat down, a wag who was present arose and proposed the united healths of the gentleman who had just sat down and Lindley Murray. This toast was drunk amid shouts of laughter, and meanwhile the victim of the joke turned to me and asked angrily: "What did that fellow mean by proposing me and Lindley Murray to-gether? I don't know any Lindley Murray. Why, I never even heard of him. he any relation to Patsy Murray what used to keep the ginmill in Hester street?" -William H. Crane in New York Herald.

There are some men who have certain fads about smoking, and some of those fads are curious and expensive. I know a man who believes that the retention of the ash on the end of the eigar makes the cigar smoke better and taste better. He says if he were a rich man he would never smoke a cigar after the ash had fallen from it. I attempted to persuade him that a cigar that retained the ash was possibly better because by this it showed that it was more evenly and closely rolled and properly seasoned, but the knocking of the ash from such a cigar would not injure the flavor or the smoking quality. But he would not be convinced. He says he can tell the difference immediately. And so he goes about carefully guarding the ashes on the end of his weeds as long as possible and looking upon their accidental loss as a temporary misfortune.— Pittsburg Dispatch.

The Amenities of Undertaking. Alpheus Hickey, a well known resident of South Sodus, N. Y., died on a recent Sunday. At the request of the widow and her brother, Henry McMullen, an undertaker from Alton, George E. Burns, was summoned. Mr. Burns came and laid the remains out, embaiming them, and hung crape on the door. Later in the evening a son, Charles, residing at Sodus, who was not very well liked by the deceased father because he had not visited him during his sickness, appeared, accompanied by James J. Wylie, an undertaker from Sodus. Wylie, at the son's request, re-embalmed the remains, tore down the craps and hung up his own. The son and rival audertaker then left. The next morning Undertaker Burns came again to bring a coffin and the necessary chairs for the funeral. Finding that Undertaker Wylio had been there, he again embalmed the remains, and gathering up the materials used by Mr. Wylie hustled them out to the barn on the premses, where they were thrown in a heap. The funeral services were held from the house Tuesday afternoon with Undertaker

Alcohol In Mothers' Milk. The discovery has been made by a Ger-man physiologist that the milk of inchri-ate mothers contains a small amount of alcohol, and it is his belief that such mothers communicate to their offspring a desire for stimulants.
